Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: . . . although since the age of twentyfive, has had repeated attacks of liver complaint, presenting symptoms of the passage of gall-stones. Dr. Welch, a partner of Dr. Watmaugh, saw the patient in April, 1865. He found a tumor larger than an orange in the right byochondrium. It was extremely hard, circumscribed and movable. The acute symptoms were relieved, but the tumor increased slowly in size until by the middle of July it had occupied part of the right (1) Lancet, August 14, 1875. The center of the tumor was on a line with, and twelve and a half centimeters from the umbilicus. She experienced no pain, and presented no symptoms of the formation of pus, although considerable emaciation and loss of strength. The diagnosis was doubtful, but the prevailing opinion was, that it was malignant, although there was no history of cancer in her family, but she continued to lose flesh and strength, which seemed to confirm such a diagnosis. On the fourth of January, a blister was applied over the center of the tumor, which was now found to be firmly adherent to the abdominal wall. The blister gave exit to a large quantity of pus and blood, which caused a diminution in the size of the tumor. The discharge was finally stopped by a hard substance in the orifice, which the patient picked out with a hair...
