In order to explain the late movements of the Seneca nation, it will be necessary to review the previous state of that people, and the changes to which they have been subjected, by the various and powerful influences of Civilization pressing on them throughout all their borders. Before the arrival of Europeans in America, and, indeed, until within a very few years past, the Indian tribes on this Continent were governed by Chiefs, chosen by the Clans, and formally installed by the Nation, in a general Council held for that purpose. From the little known of them in their original state, it appears that their Government was only adapted to a very simple condition of Society. Their lands were held in common; every individual in the nation without distinction or exception having equal rights in them; (See app. doc. G) of course they required no laws to regulate titles to Real Estate, or prevent fraudulent conveyances; - they held very little personal property, and that little, from the force of the moral feelings; in their inartificial state, was safe in the bosom of society, without lock or key. There was no coercive power vested in their Chiefs. They had no jails, gibbets, nor penitentiaries; - no Constables nor Sheriffs. Parental authority,...
