There s one fellow that I wot of, Who in full career of life Still can dream of daring princes, Still can bare his hunting-knife When amid the purple forests He beholds the lion ramp, Or above the after-hatches Hears the pirate-chieftain tramp. He has won the golden apples, He has climbed the outer cliff, And beheld the Indian stalking The ferocious hippogriff. O my brothers, if you only Were with faith of children blest, You would know the sun arisen Is still rising farther west; And between the morn and evening, In the grayness of the day, You would see the splendid colours And the magic of your way!
